Excellence. A word, which best typifies the Honorable Judge Elizabeth Maass' background. At this point, you're thinking that I'm planning for the day when I find myself in front of Judge Maass, but I'm certain if you read further that you will agree with my choice of words.

Judge Maass is a native Floridian. She attended Northshore High School and graduated number one in her class. After Northshore, she went to Princeton where she graduated with honors in 1978. Thereafter, she attended Columbia University. Not only did Judge Maass graduate with honors from Columbia; she received the honor of being named a Harlan Fiske Stone scholar.

After law school, Judge Maass followed the usual course of taking the Bar and practicing law. However, the Judge squeezed into this routine marriage, two children and a successful practice with a highly reputable law firm. The day after the Florida Bar Ethics Exam, Judge Maass, then Elizabeth Tiedemann, married Robb Maass. They enjoyed the pleasure of each other's company both at work and at home, since both were employed following law school graduation at Alley, Maass, Rogers & Lindsay.

Judge Maass remained with Alley, Maass, Rogers & Lindsay from 1981 until her appointed in January of 1990. Her practice involved primarily general corporate and commercial with some appellate work as well.

The Palm Beach County Bar Association welcomes this woman of excellence to the bench.
